ALEXANDRIA, VA, June 23, 2011 – STG International, Inc. (STGi), a leader in providing human capital solutions to the federal government, announced today that it has been awarded a Blanket Purchase Agreement (BPA) with the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to support the Office of Human Resources (OHR).

“STGi is proud to be able to advance the National Institutes of Health’s mission by providing essential services for its Office of Human Resources,” said Michelle S. Lee, President and CEO of STGi. “This opportunity reminds us that an organization’s employees are its most important asset, and we look forward to working with the OHR to accomplish the Agency’s human capital goals.”

The Office of Human Resources at the NIH is responsible for providing expert workforce management support in order to implement the NIH Strategic Human Capital Management Plan. OHR does this by ensuring that management is mission-oriented, the workforce is diverse and highly engaged, and the organization promotes improvement through continued learning.

Through this BPA, STGi will help to accomplish NIH’s mission by conducting position classification and recruitment, providing one-on-one benefits and career guidance counseling for employees, analyzing performance management and administration of employee reviews and labor-management obligations. STGi will also conduct an analysis of the NIH Awards Program and a workforce planning review, providing recommendations to management for areas of strategic improvement.
